Summary

This report on the work of the Ethical Journalism Network in 2017 and the first months of 2018 covers a period in which the buzzwords “fake news” and “post-truth” provided a misleading but appropriate focus for the news industry.

In recent months the challenges of a flawed information landscape have been dramatically exposed with Google, Facebook and other internet giants being called to account for their failure to promptly deal with the pollution of the information landscape.

The global debate about the integrity of information in the public sphere provides a golden opportunity to strengthen journalism and to promote ethical communications and the focus of the EJN has been about getting back to basics and building trust in reliable, accurate and stylish story-telling.

The year began with intense debate about the rise of malicious news-making by unscrupulous centres of power – the so-called “fake news” crisis – and it ended with a sense that although this crisis will pass, much more must be done to strengthen the craft of journalism to meet the demands of a rapidly-changing world of communications.

The major EJN achievements during the past year include:

1. The development of a comprehensive programme for building networks for change in Africa through training in data journalism, good governance, respect for authors’ rights, and by creating networks for ethical journalism to combat corruption, and violent extremism (See Appendix Three, Four, Five);

2. The creation of a united front among media, journalists’ groups and media support groups in Turkey and the preparation of a detailed action plan to strengthen journalism, even in the midst of hostile conditions (See Appendix One);

3. The launch of practical tools to combat hate speech, including a glossary of hate speech for journalists in Egypt and a ground-breaking initiative bringing together journalists from the north and the south of Cyprus to work together in the production of a glossary to identify and eradicate hate speech on both sides of the divided island;

4. The carrying out of a mission to China which opens the door to new co-operation with Chinese media and with journalism schools;

5. The launch of The Ethical Journalist’s Toolkit, a free online training programme for journalists and people supporting ethical communications developed in partnership with the Thomson Foundation in London;

6. The publication of two issues of Ethics in the News, reports on the ethical challenges in covering the major stories of 2017 and 2018 which outlines ways in which journalists can respond to the threat of disinformation and confront the global trust crisis which is overwhelming the public information sphere;

7. The preparation and distribution of detailed guidelines for journalists and media around the world reporting on migration and human trafficking;

8. The launch of new programmes with UNESCO and Council of Europe to support independent media in the Western Balkans targeting self-regulation and good governance in Albania, Montenegro, and Macedonia;

9. New streams of work with the other United Nations agencies including initiatives on media reporting of migration, helping media track migrant deaths and the launch of a mentoring project for reporters covering labour migration in the Middle East and Gulf states with the International Labour Organization

10. We also consolidated work in three major EJN actions areas:

   a. The world’s first searchable database of media codes, press councils and standards Accountable Journalism (accountablejournalism.org) has been reinforced with Middle East and Asian support programmes;

   b. The EJN’s campaign against hate speech – Turning the Page of Hate – was endorsed by African journalists at meetings in Abuja, Douala and Nairobi, as well as by Arab media leaders at meetings in Jordan and Cairo, which strengthened the Arab Media Hub Against Hate Speech. (See Appendix Two.)

   c. The EJN’s Ethical Media Audits, a tool to improve transparency and governance in the ownership and administration of media, has been adopted by one of the world’s leading media development groups, International Media Support, for use in its 25 country programmes in some of the world’s most troubled and challenging regions.

The EJN has continued to grow. We have increased our activities, strengthened our links with supporters and at the same time improved our internal organisation and financial standing.

We have raised our profile in the education and training of a new generation of journalists eager to immerse themselves in the technology and systems of a changing industry but committed to the values that make journalism as important to democracy as it ever has been.

During 2017 our regional programmes have reinforced and strengthened our ground-breaking action of the past four years. Across the globe our campaign to eradicate hate-speech from journalism has been strengthened by the widespread dissemination of our 5-point test for hate speech, which is now translated into 30 languages.

Today media departments and students of journalists around the world routinely turn to the themes and ideas from the EJN about the core values of journalism, whether it is to help them report the crisis of migration; or in dealing with racism and intolerance; and in their reporting of conflict and humanitarian crisis.

We have also carried out targeted actions to support ethical journalism in high-risk areas such as Turkey, Egypt, Syria and Kenya and we have developed programmes to improve good governance and self-regulation for media in areas as diverse as Pakistan, Kosovo, Jordan and China and we are working with universities and civil society groups to strengthen respect for journalism as a public good.

The EJN continues to be influential far beyond its core group. As the only world network of media professionals dedicated to ethics, governance and media self-regulation the growing enthusiasm for our work provides solid evidence that ethics and professionalism are the keys to creating reliable streams of journalism that people can trust, and they are needed more than ever.

Aidan White, President
Throughout the year, the EJN has continued to put ethical standards in journalism at the heart of discussions about media literacy and free expression.

The debate about trust in journalism and in global communications has intensified with problems of disinformation and concerns over the exploitation of private information by social networks and technology companies.

We argue that society needs to develop new ways of responding to the new context of digital information as well as the increasing influence of the state, corporations and new Internet publishers on free expression and on journalism.

On a global level, the EJN has worked closely with the agencies of the United Nations and has taken part in United Nations activities to influence policy on issues ranging from media and hate speech to the ethical framework for responsible public communications.

The situation in Turkey continues to concern the EJN. Following our special report on the crisis in the country in 2014 and the devastating events during 2016 in which media and independent journalists were targeted in a state of emergency following a coup attempt, the EJN set out a detailed analysis in the EJN report Ethics in the News. Our response to the crisis is ongoing.

During the year we have also strengthened our links with the media development community and working with International Media Support we have helped them develop an ethics strategy for media management for their partners working in 25 countries facing some of the most difficult economic, social and political challenges. We have also been in discussion with other media support groups, including Free Press Unlimited and the Open Society Institute about further sharing of the innovative work we have developed to strengthen transparency and good governance inside media.

Our regional focus on the media in countries of Africa, Asia and the Middle East has remained a top priority during the year.

Asia Programme: the EJN worked with local media and academic partners to strengthen efforts to improve standards of reporting in the face of intolerance and increasing propaganda amidst the growing political tensions in the region. Ethics, we have argued, are an antidote to media propaganda and war-mongering and we have been strongly supported by universities and leading journalists in the region.

The EJN has strengthened ethical journalism in Pakistan working with the Coalition for Ethical Journalism established in partnership with local media leaders in 2012. We have helped prepare detailed reports on a unified code of conduct for Pakistan journalism and a detailed report with recommendations on strengthening media capacity to combat external and internal pressures on journalism.

The EJN has established a working relationship with the All-China Journalists Association in China, and in April 2018 we carried out a new mission to the country where we reinforced our contacts with journalists and journalism schools. The results of our mission, which include detailed proposals for education, training and co-operation on ethical issues for media, confirm the need for new dialogues to strengthen ethical journalism without allowing self-regulation to become itself a form of control of independent journalism. The media and journalism landscape are vast and complex, but Chinese journalists are open to new forms of co-operation that will address the challenges facing media the world over.

Africa Programme: during 2017 and the beginning of 2018 the EJN carried out actions that have paved the way for an extended programme for the next three years working with the Federation of African Journalists, and a range of local partners.

We carried out work with the continent’s leading journalists’ groups in Nigeria and also held a targeted session in Cameroon ahead the elections in the autumn of 2018 and brought together media leaders in Nairobi in the aftermath of the controversial second round of the Kenyan Presidential elections to discuss how to address media bias, hate speech and propaganda as well as over the issues facing East African journalism. The results of those meetings are attached to this report (See Appendix Three, Four and Five).

All three meetings acknowledged a deepening crisis for journalism in Africa and made strong calls on media owners and managers to engage in dialogue to up their game with better governance and more transparency in order to improve the financial prospects of the profession and the news industry.

In particular, the meetings called for media owners to open themselves up to a thorough review of how they work and to set higher standards in the management and operations of media companies. It was agreed to circulate the EJN Ethical Media Audit, which helps managers and owners to bring the owners and executive branch of media into line with the ethical standards expected of journalists and editors in the newsroom.

An important initiative launched in Africa during 2017 and 2018 is an EJN programme in partnership with Norwegian media professional groups representing journalists and media employers and supported by Kopinor, the copyright agency in Norway. This programme – The Ethics of Authors Rights in the Digital Age – is an innovative online teaching tool which will raise awareness in the African media community on ways of tackling the pressure on authors’ rights from technological change.

Middle East Programme: A key part of our work is confronting hate-speech and in December the EJN held the second regional meeting of Arab media leaders to finalise a programme of practical work for the Arab Media Hub Against Hate Speech.

The EJN also took part in activities in Doha in co-operation with the Aljazeera, including participating in two major international conferences on journalism and human (rights, as well as conducting training on hate speech, migration, human rights and humanitarian reporting for senior Aljazeera journalists. With Aljazeera the EJN joined the International Press Institute, and the African Media Imperative for a symposium on human rights and journalism in Khartoum for journalists and civil society.

The opportunity also allowed the EJN to enter dialogue with the Sudanese government on its poor press freedom record and call for Sudanese media to be given the freedom to organize itself without state interference.

During 2017 the EJN continued to be at the forefront of debates to follow up our migration and media report Moving Stories. We contributed to the International Organisation of Migration book Fatal Journeys, which aims to track down the identity of the thousands of victims of the migration crisis. We also carried out a programme to produce media guidelines for reporting Trafficking in Human Beings and a 17-country study for journalists and policymakers How does media on both side of the Mediterranean Cover Migration, both in co-operation with the International Centre for Migration Policy Development.

In April 2018 the EJN published a new edition of Ethics in the News entitled Ethical Journalism: The Key to Media Futures, which looks at how the communications revolution is continuing to pose more questions than answers over a public crisis of confidence, both in democracy and in sources of public information.

Western Balkans and Turkey Programmes: The 2017 Building Trust in Media and South East Europe and Turkey UNESCO programme continued with EJN actions in Montenegro and Macedonia. The EJN dimension of the programme is directed at owners, managers and editors of media across all platforms of journalism and following the experience in Serbia and Kosovo during 2016, changes were made to the approach to take account of the difficult political and economic conditions in which media work.

During this first phase of the work in 2017 the EJN has:
1. Prepared materials to perform internal audits of media outlets in Macedonia and Montenegro to help them apply ethical standards, to manage conflicts of interests and to improve standards of good governance. These audits help develop structures for internal monitoring and regulation of performance;
2. Carried out three missions to the region in August 2017 and October 2017 and November 2017;
3. During these missions the EJN started the process selecting media houses in each target country of the project to support further actions to promote internal good governance using the principles of ethical audits. The following agreed to further work in this area:
   - In Montenegro the EJN joined a new European Union project in co-operation with the Montenegro Media

Images from left: Launch of ICMPD Media and Migration Study; and EJN’s Tom Law speaks at UNAOC ‘Spread No Hate’ meeting in Cairo, Egypt, 13 December 2017.
Institute and the Peace Institute to support ethics and good governance in local media, which launched in February 2018;

- In Macedonia the EJN is supporting efforts to create a new Association of Print Media and a separate Association of Editors. At present the journalism Code of Ethics applies only to journalists, not editors nor owners;

- In Cyprus the EJN has been assisting a ground-breaking initiative to develop a glossary of hate-speech. In an unprecedented initiative supported by the Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe journalists and media leaders on both sides of the divided island are working together to define the harsh words and troublesome phrases that are an obstacle to understanding and peaceful dialogue;

- In Turkey the EJN has initiated a solidarity process in which key organisations representing journalists and media support groups have come together to challenge the oppressive policies of the government which has targeted dissidents and media critics since the attempted coup in 2016. In 2018 the EJN organised meetings with Turkish colleagues, regulators, investigative journalism groups, and media educators in Istanbul and Ankara including the Turkish Syndicate of Journalists, the Turkish Press Council and a number of media support groups.

Although the media crisis in Turkey is profound with more than 140 journalists in jail or facing prosecution, Turkish journalists and media supporters are defiant and plan to work together to strengthen the skills, awareness and capacity of news staff. During 2018 the EJN will be working with international supporters, including the International Press Institute, to encourage further actions towards building solidarity and practical actions to support journalists and media.

For more details about the EJN’s past and future activities see: https://ethicaljournalismnetwork.org/news/activities
The EJN monitors and evaluates the impact of our work. We seek to ensure that all of our activities are gender-balanced in terms of participation and that our work increases interest in and improves recognition of the value of ethical journalism.

The following figures give an estimate of EJN reach during the year. They show that our work has reached far more than the participants we have invited to our core activities, which altogether number around 592 (an increase from 350 in 2016). In events organised by the EJN 55% of participants were women and 45% were men.

In all, from January to December 2017, the EJN carried out 106 programme-related actions (an increase from 2016) including 99 activities where there was direct contact with our target groups – journalists and media executives; media academics and students of journalism; policymakers and civil society groups totaling over 5,000 individuals. The estimated impact of these actions is as follows:

- We have reached around 848 policy makers (government representatives, officials from intergovernmental institutions and law enforcement officers (Police and Members of the Judiciary) all of them dealing with media and with a particular interest in media ethics, hate speech, migration and other issues key to our programme.

- We reached 2,027 media leaders, companies and industry representatives in particular related to our work on good-governance and ethical media management, combating hate-speech and editorial standards in reporting migration as well as 498 editors and 1,529 journalists.

- We reached 1,050 journalism students and teachers at universities and journalism schools. Highlights of this co-operation include:
  - In Asia the EJN engagement with teachers and professors in Malaysia, Thailand, Vietnam as part of a media literacy project run by the University of Vienna and the organization of two seminars on ethics for students and teachers at the National Communications University of China in Beijing and the Fujian Normal University in Fuzhou.
  - In Europe the EJN gave the keynote speech to the Association of Journalism Education annual conference in the UK and gave one-day training on media ethics to students at the School of Oriental and African Studies in London as well as lectures at Brussels Free University and the European Media Institute in Florence.
  - In Africa, the EJN’s programme of activities included sessions on improving how ethics and journalism are taught at universities and other teaching institutions, with representatives from universities in Kenya and Nigeria.

- We reached 691 leaders of journalists’ unions and media development professionals.

- Over the year the EJN took part in five events as part of the European Union Media Against Hate project with media support groups and the European Federation of Journalists in Brussels, Dublin, London, Rome, and Zagreb.

- We reached 156 media ombudsmen and regulators to discuss issues of self-regulation in countries across Europe from Africa, the Middle East, China, Turkey and across Europe including actions at a dedicated meeting for Lebanese media organized by the Maharat Foundation and at the Organisation of news Ombudsmen annual conference in Chennai, India.

- We have reached some around 651 representatives and leaders from civil society, non-government and press freedom groups.

- In tune with the changing times we have engaged with 68 leaders of social media companies and online platforms, including speaking on same panels as and asking questions of Facebook, Google and Twitter representatives on the issue of hate speech at events in Europe and the Middle East.

- Continuing into 2018, in the first three months of the year the EJN reached: 301 media leaders, 140 policy makers, 84 representatives journalists’ unions and media development professionals, 63 civil society, non-government and press freedom groups and 45 media ombudsmen and regulators, and 90 journalism students and teachers.

Resources and Communications

The EJN’s 5-point test for hate-speech, guidelines on migration reporting and the core values of journalism have continued to be translated in new languages and disseminated and promoted within these groups and the EJN’s wider networks and incorporated in curricula by trainers, educators and academics internationally. The hate speech test is increasingly being used as a tool for media monitoring by researchers and media observatories in hot spots such as Syria and Yemen.

Throughout the year the EJN was invited to contribute to debates on the future of journalism and fighting misinformation in industry leading publications, podcasts and television interviews.

The EJN’s online profile continues to grow since the re-launch of the EJN website in 2016. The number of users, page views and time spent on the site continues to grow year-on-year.
EJN Organisation and Finances

The EJN was first established in 2012 and registered as a not for profit company in the United Kingdom in 2013. It registered as a charity in the UK in March 2016.

The Network Board meets regularly and in 2017 meetings were held in January (London), April (Oslo), July (London), October (London), and December (Oslo) the annual meeting was held in London in April 2008. The minutes and records of these meetings are available for inspection at the registered offices of the EJN. The EJN has strengthened its governance rules and internal organisation (See Appendix Six).

In October 2017 the founder and Director of the EJN, Aidan White, announced his decision to step down at the end of March 2018. The Board has appointed him to the honorary role of EJN President and appointed Chris Elliott as Director. Chris has stepped down from his position as a Member of the Board of Trustees.

The EJN appointed Aida Al-Kaisy as a Programme Consultant and Danica Ilic as Programme Officer to assist in the Secretariat in implementing current projects and seeking funds to support our key areas of work.

During the year the Board members were Dorothy Byrne (Chair), Ashok Gupta (Secretary), Salim Amin, Zahera Harb, Kjersti Lovren-Stavrum, Randi Ogrey, Bernt Olufsen and Thomas Spence. During the reporting period Jeanette Gustafsdotter the General Secretary of the Swedish Media Employers Association TU was elected to the Board of Trustees. The Board was reappointed in April 2018.

The EJN Constitution was reviewed during 2016 and a further examination of governance will be carried out in 2018. At the EJN annual meetings in January 2017 and in April 2018 the EJN agreed new rules on its internal organization. (See Appendix Six).

During 2017 and for 2018 the EJN Board has elected Dorothy Byrne (Chair), Ashok Gupta (Treasurer) and Bernt Olufsen (Trustee) to serve on the EJN Administrative Committee.

Towards Financial Stability

Financially, the EJN continues to grow and has been primarily financed through a three-year contract with the Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs. During 2017 we received just over £210,000 under this contract. This support over the initial phase of EJN work has been invaluable in creating the foundations for EJN stability and expansion.

We have also received funding from other projects (including contracts with UNESCO, the Council of Europe, International Centre for Migration Policy Development, the International Labour Organisation, Fritt Ord, Evens Foundation, Organisation for Security and Co-operation in Europe and International Media Support as well as donations to the value of £105,000. The EJN continues to look to diversify its sources of funding and in 2017 we saw a significant rise in further external support with more than £35,000 received as support for our activities from international organisations.

The EJN has continued to make strong progress towards sustainability and diversity in its funding sources and to further strengthen the independence and sustainability of the organisation the Board agreed to launch an internal fund-raising drive in 2018 – setting a target to raise 100,000 Euro from our network of supporters.

Further information on the EJN and its current working programme and activities is available on http://www.ethicaljournalismnetwork.org

Building Trust in Turkey
An Ethical Network Strategy for Media in Crisis Conditions

Meetings in Istanbul and Ankara organised by the EJN, the Journalists Union of Turkey and with the support of the Turkish Press Council and independent media support groups such as P24, Teyit.Org and the Progressive Journalists Association have identified a number of key areas of work that are of intense interest and importance to the Turkish media community.

After two days of discussions the meetings have developed a draft action plan to provide support for ethical journalism and good governance in media to counter the current hostile climate and to combat self-censorship.

After two days of discussions the meetings have developed a draft action plan to provide support for ethical journalism and good governance in media to counter the current hostile climate and to combat self-censorship.

The meetings agreed that any activities should be organised in the context of broad recognition of the profound crisis facing Turkish journalism and the need to secure the release of detained and jailed journalists. All stakeholders oppose the inappropriate and politically-inspired prosecution and victimisation of journalists, journalism teachers and other civil society activists who face jail and loss of employment for exercising their democratic rights.

While recognising this priority, the meetings agreed on the need for positive steps to support independent journalism and to do this particularly by recognising that the journalism landscape today is ever-more technical and requires technological tools.

There was general agreement that the crisis in Turkey requires support for media and journalism on a number of different, but related fronts. These include:

- Training and raising awareness within the journalism community on basic principles:
  - The core values of ethical journalism: accuracy, independence, impartiality, humanity and transparency;
  - The essentials of good governance for ethical ownership and management of media;
  - The importance of self-regulation at all levels, including the level of the individual, the media enterprise, and across different platforms of distribution

- Development of further skills training and editorial tools to assist journalists in combating unethical journalism, hate-speech, and undue bias in reporting while developing good practice in journalistic methods, including use of images and pictures, protection of sources, reporting migration and other rights issues;

- Understanding the nature of change in the communications and journalism sector and facing the ethical challenges of using technology – data journalism, Internet tools for investigative journalism.

- Improving skills and capacity in the use of technology and web-based tools in journalistic work;

- Actions to strengthen self-regulation as a mechanism to improve transparency and accountability and quality of journalism at all levels;

- Research activity to analyse the current media environment including the impact of self-censorship and the scope of unethical practice across the spectrum of journalism;

- Building bridges between journalism and civil society and political centres of power to create a national dialogue about the importance of ethical communications and a new movement for media and information literacy (MIL)

- Strengthening specific areas of journalism – such as investigative journalism, video production, online portals and new forms of information and introducing awards and prizes that reflect and recognise best practice;

- Creating an informal structure for dialogue and ethical and independent journalism on which all stakeholders – teachers of journalism; media practitioners and managers; media support groups; unions, existing networks and civil society groups can play a role.

It is agreed to establish a multi-stakeholder platform, by bringing together a loose network of interested groups, that can unite different actors working on similar or complementary issues, but who at present do not meet regularly.

Such a group, based on common support for ethical journalism, could share information and work together on activities which will be of use and benefit to all. There are many divisions in journalism and bringing people together is a major challenge, but this is an essential first step in creating an open and inclusive framework for co-operation.

Existing efforts to promote professional co-operation should be strengthened and the Ethical Journalism Network model may be useful in creating space for discussion and in identifying potential resources for fresh work.

To build a coalition or consensus requires more work to identify, to involve and to overcome existing divisions and factions. There should be a candid review of work that has been done and what is effective. Many people comment that production of texts and booklets is of limited value if they are unread by target groups.

The core groups required to make this breakthrough include the journalists’ syndicate, the Press Council, the investigative journalists association, the leading journalism support groups such as P24 and a number of distinguished practitioners in the field of media education and ethical journalism in the field.

Some of the themes, ideas and strategic suggestions made so far are:

▷ Online tools for training and raising awareness are a critical element in the future strategy. There should be an open approach which targets access to journalists and students.

▷ An annual review of Turkish journalism which provides an inclusive and comprehensive assessment of the current situation and media trends would be very useful and if produced regularly could help illustrate the complexities and strengths of Turkish journalism while at the same time highlighting the challenges and the threats.

▷ A cautious approach should be taken to avoid confrontational actions. “Naming and shaming” initiatives, for instance, may satisfy the need to hold people to account, but experience shows the policy can reinforce divisions and generate resistance, conflict and opposition.

▷ Holding people responsible is important but there is a need to think through how to go about it. Using academic research techniques and independent groups may help. The work of groups like the Hrant Dink Foundation can provide useful approaches.

In Ankara the Progressive Journalists Association highlighted the importance of providing training and noted that they had begun a project with EU to provide rights-based training for journalists, as well as to NGOs. This would help people make better sense of information flows that come to us. The EJN is assisting with this work.

Finally, the meetings agreed that the proposed approach to create a new, broad and informal approach is not about creating alternatives to existing structures. An informal network would facilitate national initiatives to strengthen journalism with practical actions which could be applied across Turkey in major population centres and in regional centres.

This network would be managed and developed by existing Turkish groups, but would not interfere with the mandate or operations of any group and would aim to facilitate cooperation and to ensure maximum impact in all areas.

The fact-checking group Teyit.Org expressed fears over the lack of students willing to join training workshops. There is concern over levels of engagement.

Once again, the role of data journalism is important for all. People want to share experiences, for examples metrics, data on subscription. But there is a problem of effective connection between providers and their target groups.

The EJN proposes in discussion with the TGS and all other Turkish partners, including the IPI, to organise a further meeting in June 2018 to take this work forward.
The meeting of the 2017 Arab Media Hub Against Hate Speech, which was held parallel to the 2017 Arab Reporters for Investigative Journalism (ARIJ) conference brought together 48 journalists, researchers academics and media development professionals to discuss the latest research, best practice and new initiatives to address hate speech in the region, as well as future activities and partnerships.

As well as EJN guests the event also welcomed 4 journalists from Yemen who attending ARIJ as part of a UNESCO programme and 24 journalists who were guests of the World Association of Newspapers and News Publishers' Strengthening Media and Society programme. In total the EJN meetings were attended by 28 women and 18 men, including 4 university professors or lecturers, 24 journalists, 5 editors, 7 media development professionals, 3 members of civil society and press freedom groups, and 3 members of inter-governmental organisations.

As well as the EJN hosted event parallel to the conference the EJN played a prominent role on the agenda of the conference, organizing reporting and hate speech, which had in total 350 participants.

Report of the Arab Media Hub Against Hate Speech

Background information on previous meetings and other EJN activities relating to hate speech in Arabic media since 2014 can be found at the end of this report.

- Research on hate speech in Arab media: The meeting heard from three speakers about the latest research on hate speech in Arab media: Dr. Zahera Harb, EJN Board Member and senior lecturer in International Journalism at City University of London; Dr. Mohamed El Allali, Head of Department of Audiovisual, Higher Institute of Information Communication (ISIC) Rabat; and Tony Mikhael, Director of the Maharat Foundation’s Media Monitoring Center.

  The speakers covered ongoing research work, the connection between rumour and fake news and the spread of hate speech; the development of training, co-operation with journalism training institutions; and preparation of glossaries for Lebanon and other countries.

  Participants commented that it is very hard to interpret hate speech when there is no independent media body and that it was very important the EJN’s “5-point test for hate speech” is used by audiences as part of media literacy efforts as well as by researchers and journalists. A number of new initiatives were agreed as follow-up actions.

- Observatories and national initiatives to address hate speech in conflict zones: The speakers were Hunadah A Hariri, Head of Media & Freedoms Unit at the Syrian Center for Media and Freedom of Expression, who introduced the centre's new programme to create an observatory of Syrian media, and Marion Desmerger, Senior Communication & Information Programme Assistant at UNESCO who talked about UNESCO’s work including support for the Syrian Observatory, and a planned glossary in Yemen. She noted that a lack of coordination in Yemen had created competition and duplication between media development groups.

  Yemeni participants said that all journalists in Yemen have been forced to take sides in the conflict and emphasised the extreme conditions in which journalists are put in danger every time they leave their newsroom. The meeting agreed that the priority in Yemen has to be the safety of journalists, adding that any action should be led by Yemeni journalists. It was also agreed that the Syrian and Yemeni initiatives should use EJN’s good governance and ethical media audit and follow the template used in the Western Balkans, where meetings are held with editors in newsrooms. The EJN will work with UNESCO to ensure that monitors for both Syria and Yemen are trained in use of the five-point test for hate speech as a monitoring tool.

- WAN-IFRA (SMS) workshop for journalists on hate speech: In the context of the Media Hub Against Hate Speech meeting, EJN director, Aidan White, met with 20 journalists who are dealing with the issue of hate speech in their work from WAN-IFRA’s Strengthening Media and Society programme from Yemen, Palestine and Jordan. The session covered how journalists can judge the potential impact of potential impact of offensive and inflammatory content; how to address hate speech on social media; the role civil society to generate counter-narratives and public debate; and the impact hate speech on press freedom and freedom of expression.

- Addressing gender-based discrimination: The speaker, Fatemah Farag Founder and CEO of Welad Elbalad Media Services, spoke about her role as the MENA Director for WAN-IFRA's Women in News Program, which has included developing a glossary of terms around gender issues for media in Egypt and developing a tool compatible with the content management systems (CMS) used by newsrooms in order to make it a more useful tool for journalists. She said...
responses to hate speech and gender discrimination in Egypt and other countries in the region have to be tailored in order to be successful.

She also spoke of the Women in News project works with Human Resources departments to put in place procedures and processes to deal effectively with issues of harassment in newsrooms. Until now news organisations are happy to sign documents outlining their commitment to the issue but follow up is lacking. So far there have been no examples if of employees being held to account for harassment of abuse.

There was debate about the use of the term “honour killing”. For more background read this article from Ethics in the News 2017: http://ethicaljournalismnetwork.org/resources/publications/ethics-in-the-news/honour-killing

The meeting agreed to work on improving gender section of ethical audit and that EJN, EMDP and AUC to work with Farag to use the same content management system to support an expanded version of the Egyptian Hate Speech glossary.

A second speaker, Eliza Marks, Technical Officer with the ILO Regional Fair Migration Project in the Middle East (FAIRWAY), discussed how the FAIRWAY project works to promote fair migration and prevent forced labour and human trafficking. In 2017 the ILO produced a Media-Friendly Glossary on Migration: Middle East Edition, which is available in both Arabic and English.

Egyptian Media Glossary on Hate Speech: In this session the event heard from the Egyptian participants - Ahmed Montasser, Fatemah Farag, Naiila Handy, Rabab Kamal, Tarek Said, Tarek Atia – about their ideas for the future of the glossary. It was agreed to prepare a new version of the Egyptian hate speech glossary in a similar format to the ILO glossary on migration and to include a Wiki model to allow more contributors. Both students from the University of Cairo and journalists will be involved as will media outlets, including sports journalists and across a variety of platforms and news outlets. In addition, gender-based hate speech will be incorporated into the glossary and new categories will be introduced including: sport, entertainment, children's programmes and Youtube users.

Outreach to Media and Civil Society in Egypt: The meeting agreed to engage editors on the subject of hate speech and to promote examples of good practice. Once online, the new version of the glossary will be launched by the Egyptian Editors Forum and journalists will be involved as will media outlets, including sport, entertainment, children’s programmes and Youtube users.

Comparative Studies on Hate Speech Laws: A comparative analysis of laws regarding hate speech in North Africa and the Middle East to be prepared. This should be conducted in collaboration with educational institutions in each country.

Online Tools: Various Various suggestions were made regarding how best to make these resources available online and offline. These include A pocket sized booklet on hate speech; An Ethical Journalism App in Arabic; Integrating glossaries into the Content Management Systems of newsrooms; A mobile-first website of EJN’s materials in Arabic; and creation of a virtual Arab Media Hub to Challenge Hate Speech to include all glossaries from around the Arab world.

APPENDIX THREE

Journalism for Democracy in the Digital Age
Abuja, Nigeria | 1-2 March 2018

Declaration

The global information crisis in which journalism is being overwhelmed by the narrow self-interests of political and corporate centres of power is felt strongly in West Africa where hate-speech, fake news and abusive exploitation of information technology are endangering pluralism and democracy.

Democratic processes West Africa are in danger of being undermined by unscrupulous politicians and the prevalence of false, hateful and divisive information that creates fear, ignorance and uncertainty within the public at large.

We, the participants at this regional conference of journalists, editors, self-regulatory bodies and educators meeting in Abuja to discuss the defence and promotion of ethical journalism in West Africa, believe that the crisis of propaganda, fake news and hate speech requires a practical and comprehensive response which puts ethics, self-regulation and good governance at the heart of journalism across the region.

The future of democratic pluralism and the defence of human rights are dependent on the right of all citizens to receive reliable and useful information. We believe that ethical journalism is the key provider of the information democracy needs to survive.

We condemn all forms of violence against journalists in Africa, attempts to bribe and corrupt the process of journalism and all attempts to manipulate media for propaganda. We also call on all journalists, in spite of these threats, to redouble their efforts and live up to the values and standards of the profession.

We call on journalists, editors and media owners to build professional solidarity and to work together to promote ethics and good governance to confront the information crisis.

In particular we recommend the following actions to strengthen journalism.

On Hate Speech: We call on all media professionals to support the continental campaign Turning the Page of Hate to expose, isolate and eliminate all forms of incitement to intense hatred and violence.

We recommend that the EJN, FAJ, NUJ and other partners work together to promote practical tools such as the 5-point test for hate-speech for training of journalists in newsrooms and for freelance reporters and to include it in their codes of ethics.

We ask the EJN and FAJ to work with relevant stakeholders in Nigeria and other countries in the region to promote better understanding of words and terms that can lead to hatred and intolerance. These glossaries should explore all aspects of hate speech including where the use of such language targets vulnerable groups, minorities, or women in society who are particularly the victims of abuse.

On Election Reporting: We welcome the timely nature of the event and call on the EJN and FAJ to work with media groups to create reporting guidelines and hate speech glossaries ahead of this year’s elections in Gambia (2018), Nigeria (Feb 2019), Mali (Sept 2018), Senegal (Feb 2019), Togo (July 2018) and elsewhere in the region. These guidelines should be based on the lessons learnt from the experiences of recent elections in Gambia, Ghana and Liberia where activities and programmes to improve reporting included:

• The creation of codes of conduct for election reporting, which are distributed to all journalists in the country; are made available in printed booklets or by a mobile application; Include agreement with broadcasters about balance and due impartiality in terms of representation and diversity.

• Multi-stakeholder meetings before elections, bringing together journalists, security services, judiciary and politicians for dialogue to help ensure safety of journalists.

• Effective self-regulation through media councils that deal with complaints in a timely and fair manner in order to decrease the prevalence of politicians and others resorting to legal recourse.

We ask that EJN and FAJ deliver training of trainers ahead of the upcoming elections in the region with a particular focus on impartiality, hate speech, safety, verification and fact checking. These trainers should then deliver training in newsrooms and for freelancers across these countries in advance of the election campaigns.

The guidelines and the training should encourage proper scrutiny of the manifesto commitments of all parties, analyse what effect they will have on citizens, check claims by politicians through fact-checking initiatives, as well as focusing on polls, personalities and controversy.

Furthermore, we ask that FAJ and the EJN develop a long-term strategic plan for similar interventions ahead of other elections in Africa.
We ask that FAJ coordinate monitoring of elections with delegations of journalists from around the region to act as monitors with a clear mission to assess and encourage the implementation of codes of conduct and to monitor threats and attacks against journalists.

We call on political parties and their representatives to show greater self-discipline and restraint in their public communications and we call on unions in the region to set an example on how to conduct elections transparently and fairly.

On Ethics, Good Governance and Corruption: We recognise that political corruption is a significant obstacle to democracy and economic growth in West Africa and the expansion and development of journalism that will hold those in power to account. In order to confront this issue there must be greater commitment to investigative journalism and sound financial reporting. The meeting agreed this will not be possible without more actions to improve the capacity of newsrooms to have the time and resources to carry out adequate research and the editorial freedom to scrutinise centres of state and corporate power.

We note the common practice of employers not paying journalists – sometimes for months on end – and call on media owners and the government to address this with urgency. Not only is this a grave violation of labour rights, it has a serious effect on the ability for journalists to act independently and resist bribes and brown envelope journalism.

We note the trust crisis in media in West Africa and call on media owners and managers to engage in dialogue to enhance governance and transparency in order to improve the future financial prospects of the profession and the news industry.

We welcome the participation of media leaders and agree to circulate the EJN Ethical Media Audit and information about the role of independent ombudsmen and readers’ editors to inspire further discussion in Nigeria and the region on the value of transparent and accountable ownership and management of media organisations. Editors Guilds should be encouraged as forum for editors to discuss these issues.

Considering that court cases in Nigeria and other countries can take 20-30 years, we call for effective arbitration and complaints procedures to be adopted by press councils as a matter of urgency. We also call on media companies themselves to adopt accountability mechanisms, including but not exclusive to ombudsmen and readers’ editors in order to provide timely, fair and independent responses to complaints and to decrease the number of times they are taken to court.

We call on FAJ to work with affiliates to take legal issues to the ECOWAS court if they are not being resolved in a timely fashion on a national level.

On Self-Regulation: The meeting agreed that it should be for the media industry to decide upon accreditation criteria for journalists and that governments should not impose prohibitive or punitive criteria on the profession. The meeting heard that credible self-regulation remains an essential objective in building public trust in journalism.

The NUJ will consider the recommendation from Nigeria’s Ministry of Information to provide guidelines and engage with citizen journalists.

Codes of Conduct: There was consensus that many codes of ethics have not been updated for many years and the advent of the digital age has led to gaps in codes that should be addressed, especially in regard to hate speech, propaganda, violent extremism and terrorism. We encourage all responsible bodies in West Africa to review their codes of ethics with special reference to hate speech, propaganda, violent extremism and terrorism and to also consider including examples of the public interest.

We recommend that issues of diversity, such as how to portray people with special needs and other minorities and vulnerable groups are given prominence in future updates to codes of ethics and participants agree that a renewed focus on implementing existing codes is needed. Suggestions in this regard include adding codes of ethics to the contracts of journalists and considering, in extreme circumstances where journalists have repeatedly violated codes of ethics, sanctions to be imposed that are agreed within the profession.

On Gender: The meeting recognised that violence meant to intimidate women into silence and called on media to join civil society in fighting gender discrimination and hate speech that is characterised by stereotyping.

Men and women should be treated equally and specific mention of this should be added to election codes of conduct and codes of ethics. We call on media organisations to promote gender balance in the newsrooms, in leadership and as sources of information.

On On The Ethics of Authors’ Rights in the Digital Age: The meeting noted that the traditional defence of authors’ rights in the digital age requires the strengthening of awareness of the importance of economic, professional and legal rights of authors.

We note that progress that can be made through collective bargaining to ensure that journalists maintain some rights to their material and are compensated when it is syndicated or sold on to other media houses and we call on unions in the region to redouble their efforts in this regard. The meeting welcomed proposals to create reporting mechanisms for the worst cases of plagiarism and “copy and paste” journalism in order to have the evidence to negotiate agreements with media houses and encourage better recognition of the rights of journalists in theory and in practice.

Those present also welcome the EJN proposal to develop an Africa-based programme to strengthen authors’ rights protection in journalism and media. This will be established through an online tool for journalists to raise awareness on the importance of authors’ rights and how they can defend their interests across the new information landscape.
On Reporting Terrorism and Violent Extremism: The meeting agreed that reporting terrorism and violent extremism remains one of the most dangerous pursuits for journalists in terms of their physical safety but also through laws that demand journalists reveal their sources. We note that more training is needed, especially on the issue of protecting sources and dealing with terrorist propaganda based on UNESCO’s “Terrorism and the Media” Handbook.

On Freedom of Information: We call on freedom of information laws to be strengthened, simplified where they exist and for them to be created where they do not already exist.

On Teaching Journalism: Recognising the financial, technical and other resource challenges faced by teaching institutions the meeting recommended the following actions to improve the quality of teaching the ethics of journalism and to prepare students to the realities of working in newsrooms and as freelancers in the modern media environment:

- Deeper collaborations and dialogue between academia and practitioners, including university lecturers and professors spending time in newsrooms.
- Encouraging teaching institutions to be more open to contributors or guest lecturers who may not have academic qualifications but do have valuable practical experience of the industry.
- Support the sustainability and development of existing professional institutes of journalism to provide mid-career training as well as supporting the creation of new institutes of journalism where a need is identified. West African countries can learn from the experiences of Nigeria and other countries that have successfully developed institutes of journalism.
- Mentorship schemes between students, teachers and journalists should be expanded so that journalists are prepared for the reality of the newsroom and to give them ideas about how to prosper and think about under-reported stories.
- Training institutions and news organisations should encourage specialisation.
- Universities and others should make use of the free courses and tools that are available such as those produced by the Thomson Foundation and the EJN.
- Institutions should consider amending their curricula so that:
  - Ethics should not only be taught together with law. Ethics should also be taught throughout the curricula, with a focus on applied ethics, critical thinking and practical scenarios in regard to how journalists can remain impartial amid political and financial pressures and exercise sound editorial judgement.

On Media Literacy: The meeting agreed on the need for holistic media literacy programmes that bring together, media owners, regulatory bodies, journalist unions, academic institutions, media development groups and civil society. We have to get out of our silos and form collaborations with all stakeholders and involve citizens as equal partners in the debate around media literacy and ethics.

The meeting agreed that initiatives linking journalists, media, and wider civil society were needed to promote civil discourse in the public sphere and that journalists and media must proactively communicate what the mission and goals of journalism and its role in society based on the values of; transparency about who you are and your agenda, shared humanity, and accurate fact-based communications. Teaching of media literacy must go beyond the technical and use Africa’s history of oral storytelling.

Awards for journalistic excellence should be used to encourage ethical reporting.
